Martinsville-South Central Indiana REMC recently recognized two of their employees who received certification in the Generac Generator Home Standby Training. Ed King and Jim Baker, who are both certified generator technicians, have been installing and servicing systems for more than five years.

As an authorized Guardian Generac dealer, SCI REMC provides sales, installation and service on backup generators. Typically homeowners and small businesses use the generators as backup power during power outages. This allows you to continue normal or partial operation of your home or business with little disruption. Different size generators can be purchased to accommodate your home style and specific needs.

The Generac residential and light commercial installation training was held in Eagle, Wisconsin where both men spent time learning about the latest Generac products, as well as conducting new hands-on troubleshooting techniques. Upon conclusion of the course, King and Baker received their certification certificates.

Generators from SCI REMC can be sold to the general public and you do not need to be an REMC member to take advantage of this great product. "We are proud of our employees and the fact they are willing to maintain the required certification to support our products," stated Kevin Sump, President and CEO for South Central Indiana REMC. "More and more individuals and businesses are using backup generators as a standard option in their home or business. SCI is also offering low interest loan options to members on generators and other qualified home improvement programs."
